

Eamon Grimsby

Character Dossier

Boisterous, generous, easily bored salvage pilot of the Academy of Vell

Overview

Eamon Grimsby is a salvage pilot living in the Academy of Vell. Eamon is 22 years old, originally from Oldbridge, and is known around the Hall of Echoes as boisterous, generous, easily bored. In conversation Eamon narrates their own actions under their breath.

Background

Eamon arrived in the Academy of Vell 24 years ago after leaving Oldbridge under circumstances Eamon describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Faculty of Applied Wonders; the second was the one that stuck. Today Eamon works as a salvage pilot near the north observatory and is paid, when paid at all, in guilders.

Eamon learned the trade from Nadira Merriwether, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Eamon's life is with Baptiste Thornbury, over a matter neither will explain. The person Eamon trusts most is Nadira Merriwether.

Current goal: to win the harvest fair for the fifth time. Greatest fear: the bells at midnight.

Personality and speech

Temperament: boisterous, generous, easily bored.

Speech pattern: Eamon narrates their own actions under their breath.

Tells: when lying, Eamon mentions Bramble the parrot for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Eamon Grimsby
Role	salvage pilot
Home	the Academy of Vell
Hometown	Oldbridge
Age	22
Favourite dish	midnight peach hand pies
Pet	Bramble, a parrot
Lucky number	585

Workshop password	kelp-vane
Mentor	Nadira Merriwether
Rival	Baptiste Thornbury
Closest friend	Nadira Merriwether

Secret

Eamon once forged a letter of passage for a stranger who turned out to be a wanted person, and still keeps the copy.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Eamon: I am the salvage pilot. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Eamon: Midnight peach hand pies. Do not tell Baptiste I said so.

Visitor: Is Bramble yours?

Eamon: Bramble belongs to nobody. Bramble tolerates me. Lucky number is 585, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, autumn of year 11

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the greenhouse cloisters: 10 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the greenhouse cloisters: 83 of everything, except the sack of salt, which is always short. Winifred came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the comet. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 2, winter of year 11

Jasper came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the north observatory; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon was hired to carry a sack of salt from the north observatory to the greenhouse cloisters without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 3, spring of year 11

Eamon found a tin whistle half-buried near the Hall of Echoes and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon found a sack of salt half-buried near the Hall of Echoes and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon found a sextant half-buried near the Hall of Echoes and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 4, spring of year 11

the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the comet. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Marisol came by asking about the tax on doors. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the bell tower. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it.

Entry 5, summer of year 11

Lysander came by asking about the singing at the docks. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a brass lantern from the Hall of Echoes to the candle library without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon closed early, walked to the candle library, and watched the lights come on. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 6, autumn of year 11

Bram came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon repaired the copper pipe at the bell tower for Kestrel, who paid in 88 guilders and a long story about the tariff on salt. Eamon found a cracked compass half-buried near the bell tower and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 7, winter of year 11

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the north observatory: 83 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the north observatory: 47 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short. A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the north observatory; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon repaired the brass lantern at the north observatory for Katarina, who paid in 49 guilders and a long story about the price of lamp oil. Eamon was hired to carry a cracked compass from the north observatory to the bell tower without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 8, spring of year 11

Thaddeus came by asking about the harvest count. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Wendeline came by asking about the tax on doors. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a spool of wire from the candle library to the greenhouse cloisters without opening it, and mostly succeeded. At the candle library, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real tin whistle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 9, spring of year 11

Eamon found a coil of rope half-buried near the candle library and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Rumours about the new curfew reached the candle library. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon closed early, walked to the Hall of Echoes, and watched the lights come on. Eamon closed early, walked to the Hall of Echoes, and watched the lights come on. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 10, autumn of year 11

Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon found a wax seal half-buried near the Hall of Echoes and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon won 87 guilders on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Eamon repaired the grain scale at the Hall of Echoes for Nadira, who paid in 71 guilders and a long story about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 11, winter of year 11

Someone left a tin whistle on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the bell tower. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Wren came by asking about the old tunnels. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the bell tower; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 12, summer of year 11

Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. At the bell tower, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the bell tower. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Phaedra came by asking about the rumour of a second well. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a iron kettle from the bell tower to the Hall of Echoes without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 13, summer of year 12

A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the greenhouse cloisters; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the greenhouse cloisters and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon was hired to carry a wax seal from the greenhouse cloisters to the Hall of Echoes without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a sack of salt on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 14, winter of year 12

Eamon repaired the copper pipe at the Hall of Echoes for Juniper, who paid in 54 guilders and a long story about who really won the regatta. A dispute over who really won the regatta flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Hall of Echoes; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon won 36 guilders on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Eamon moved the oilskin map indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about who really won the regatta. At the Hall of Echoes, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real bundle of letters from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 15, summer of year 12

At the greenhouse cloisters, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon found a pair of spectacles half-buried near the greenhouse cloisters and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the greenhouse cloisters; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 16, autumn of year 12

Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon closed early, walked to the candle library, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the missing shipment flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the bell tower; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the bell tower; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon repaired the clockwork bird at the bell tower for Ignatius, who paid in 72 guilders and a long story about the missing shipment.

Entry 17, spring of year 12

A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the north observatory; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon repaired the wax seal at the north observatory for Lucienne, who paid in 58 guilders and a long story about the old tunnels.

Entry 18, autumn of year 12

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the price of lamp oil for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the bell tower, and watched the lights come on. Eamon repaired the ledger at the greenhouse cloisters for Yusuf, who paid in 21 guilders and a long story about the missing shipment. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 19, summer of year 12

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Zeph came by asking about the census. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon closed early, walked to the candle library, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 20, winter of year 12

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 21, autumn of year 12

Eamon closed early, walked to the Hall of Echoes, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a oilskin map on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. The weather turned. Eamon moved the copper pipe indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the quarantine.

Entry 22, autumn of year 12

Rumours about the harvest count reached the candle library. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the candle library, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. Ysolde came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about who really won the regatta for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 23, autumn of year 12

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Hall of Echoes. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the Hall of Echoes, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. At the Hall of Echoes, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon won 39 guilders on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 24, spring of year 12

A dispute over the right way to mend a net flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Hall of Echoes; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Rowan came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Eamon moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew.

Entry 25, winter of year 13

Eamon won 34 guilders on a bet about the missing shipment and spent all of it on supper. Eamon repaired the ledger at the candle library for Caspian, who paid in 57 guilders and a long story about who really won the regatta. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 26, summer of year 13

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon closed early, walked to the north observatory, and watched the lights come on. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Hall of Echoes: 90 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Hall of Echoes: 45 of everything, except the tin whistle, which is always short.

Entry 27, summer of year 13

A dispute over the comet flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the greenhouse cloisters; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon found a copper pipe half-buried near the greenhouse cloisters and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the price of lamp oil. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 28, summer of year 13

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. The weather turned. Eamon moved the tin whistle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the rumour of a second well. Eamon repaired the bundle of letters at the bell tower for Thaddeus, who paid in 87 guilders and a long story about the new curfew. Eamon repaired the glass float at the bell tower for Eamon, who paid in 60 guilders and a long story about the tariff on salt. Eamon found a glass float half-buried near the bell tower and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 29, autumn of year 14

Eamon repaired the sack of salt at the north observatory for Thaddeus, who paid in 56 guilders and a long story about the right way to mend a net. Eamon found a sextant half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the north observatory, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 30, spring of year 14

Eamon was hired to carry a oilskin map from the north observatory to the Hall of Echoes without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the north observatory: 31 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the comet. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the north observatory: 63 of everything, except the ledger, which is always short. Anouk came by asking about the missing shipment. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 31, spring of year 14

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the candle library: 29 of everything, except the coil of rope, which is always short. Eamon closed early, walked to the bell tower, and watched the lights come on. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the candle library: 38 of everything, except the oilskin map, which is always short.

Entry 32, autumn of year 14

Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the candle library. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Juniper came by asking about the tariff on salt. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 33, summer of year 15

The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Eamon repaired the grain scale at the Hall of Echoes for Marisol, who paid in 53 guilders and a long story about the census. Eamon repaired the coil of rope at the Hall of Echoes for Teodora, who paid in 70 guilders and a long story about the tariff on salt. The weather turned. Eamon moved the cracked compass indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Hall of Echoes; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.

Entry 34, winter of year 15

the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the right way to mend a net. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the bell tower. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Eamon won 83 guilders on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper. At the bell tower, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 35, autumn of year 15

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon closed early, walked to the Hall of Echoes, and watched the lights come on. Nadira came by asking about the tax on doors. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon found a sack of salt half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon found a signal flag half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 36, spring of year 15

Eamon spent the day counting stock at the north observatory: 42 of everything, except the wax seal, which is always short. Eamon closed early, walked to the greenhouse cloisters, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a bundle of letters on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Matthias came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon found a oilskin map half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 37, autumn of year 16

Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Hall of Echoes. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Zubair came by asking about the tariff on salt. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the Hall of Echoes, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon was hired to carry a coil of rope from the Hall of Echoes to the candle library without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 38, spring of year 16

Eamon closed early, walked to the Hall of Echoes, and watched the lights come on. Eamon found a sack of salt half-buried near the candle library and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon closed early, walked to the Hall of Echoes, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 39, winter of year 16

A dispute over the singing at the docks flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the greenhouse cloisters; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the greenhouse cloisters: 11 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about who really won the regatta. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the old tunnels for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 40, spring of year 16

The weather turned. Eamon moved the pair of spectacles indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the new curfew. Eamon found a spool of wire half-buried near the candle library and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Eamon won 39 guilders on a bet about whether the bridge will hold and spent all of it on supper. Eamon was hired to carry a sack of salt from the candle library to the greenhouse cloisters without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a pair of spectacles on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 41, winter of year 17

Eamon found a signal flag half-buried near the Hall of Echoes and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. At the Hall of Echoes, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real signal flag from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Eamon moved the coil of rope indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census. the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the quarantine. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 42, autumn of year 17

the Faculty of Applied Wonders sent a notice about the old tunnels. Eamon read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Eamon won 60 guilders on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. Eamon closed early, walked to the greenhouse cloisters, and watched the lights come on. At the candle library, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real iron kettle from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 43, autumn of year 17

A dispute over the quarantine flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Hall of Echoes; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the Hall of Echoes: 76 of everything, except the bolt of linen, which is always short. Eamon repaired the sack of salt at the Hall of Echoes for Sable, who paid in 85 guilders and a long story about the harvest count.

Entry 44, spring of year 17

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. A dispute over the harvest count flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the north observatory; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Ignatius came by asking about the tax on doors. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. Eamon was hired to carry a ledger from the north observatory to the Hall of Echoes without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 45, winter of year 18

Vesna came by asking about the old tunnels. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. The weather turned. Eamon moved the glass float indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the old tunnels. Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon found a sack of salt half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 46, autumn of year 18

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon closed early, walked to the candle library, and watched the lights come on. Eamon closed early, walked to the candle library, and watched the lights come on. Eamon closed early, walked to the candle library, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 47, winter of year 18

At the north observatory, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Eamon moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet. Eamon repaired the sextant at the north observatory for Isadora, who paid in 51 guilders and a long story about the missing shipment. Eamon spent the day counting stock at the north observatory: 46 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short.

Entry 48, summer of year 18

Eamon won 38 guilders on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tax on doors for an hour and parted better friends than before. The weather turned. Eamon moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about whether the bridge will hold.

Entry 49, winter of year 19

Eamon won 84 guilders on a bet about who really won the regatta and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Eamon moved the sack of salt indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Eamon closed early, walked to the greenhouse cloisters, and watched the lights come on. At the Hall of Echoes, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real oilskin map from a fake one by weight alone. Eamon found a cracked compass half-buried near the Hall of Echoes and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 50, spring of year 19

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Someone left a wax seal on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. Eamon was hired to carry a sack of salt from the candle library to the Hall of Echoes without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 51, summer of year 19

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before. Eamon was hired to carry a tin whistle from the Hall of Echoes to the north observatory without opening it, and mostly succeeded. A dispute over the old tunnels flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the Hall of Echoes; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Eamon won 82 guilders on a bet about the rumour of a second well and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 52, summer of year 19

A stranger asked Eamon for the password to the workshop. Eamon laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Eamon repaired the tin whistle at the north observatory for Hamish, who paid in 75 guilders and a long story about the tariff on salt. Eamon found a ledger half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 53, spring of year 19

Qadira came by asking about the comet. Eamon said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the bell tower, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the bell tower. Eamon pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. At the bell tower, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real brass lantern from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 54, autumn of year 19

Eamon found a cracked compass half-buried near the north observatory and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Eamon has a suspect and is probably right. At the north observatory, Eamon taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the new curfew flared up between Eamon and a neighbour outside the north observatory; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding.