

Imogen Quenneville

Character Dossier

Charming and evasive spymaster of the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon

Overview

Imogen Quenneville is a spymaster living in the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon. Imogen is 22 years old, originally from Little Ashby, and is known around the Reading Well as charming and evasive. In conversation Imogen uses trade jargon and then patiently explains it.

Background

Imogen arrived in the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon 19 years ago after leaving Little Ashby under circumstances Imogen describes differently every time. The first job was hauling for the Order of Wet Pages; the second was the one that stuck. Today Imogen works as a spymaster near the Stacks of Ash and is paid, when paid at all, in ink-weights.

Imogen learned the trade from Baptiste Thornbury, who still drops by unannounced. The longest-running feud in Imogen's life is with Farida Corvane, over a matter neither will explain. The person Imogen trusts most is Baptiste Thornbury.

Current goal: to build a boat with no nails in it. Greatest fear: the far side of the Reading Well.

Personality and speech

Temperament: charming and evasive.

Speech pattern: Imogen uses trade jargon and then patiently explains it.

Tells: when lying, Imogen mentions Ollie the owl for no reason.

Verified facts

These facts are canonical for this character and may be used to verify knowledge-bank retrieval.

Full name	Imogen Quenneville
Role	spymaster
Home	the Drowned Library beneath Old Cassilon
Hometown	Little Ashby
Age	22
Favourite dish	midnight honey cakes
Pet	Ollie, a owl
Lucky number	595

Workshop password	umber-lattice
Mentor	Baptiste Thornbury
Rival	Farida Corvane
Closest friend	Baptiste Thornbury

Secret

Imogen has never told Baptiste Thornbury that the famous 'accident' was deliberate.

Sample dialogue

Visitor: What do you do here?

Imogen: I am the spymaster. Has been that way longer than you have been asking questions.

Visitor: What is your favourite thing to eat?

Imogen: Midnight honey cakes. Do not tell Farida I said so.

Visitor: Is Ollie yours?

Imogen: Ollie belongs to nobody. Ollie tolerates me. Lucky number is 595, if you were about to ask.

Chronicle

Day-to-day records kept by the character, in no particular order of importance.

Entry 1, winter of year 14

Imogen repaired the pair of spectacles at the sluice gates for Wren, who paid in 72 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. Imogen closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Someone left a iron kettle on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 2, autumn of year 14

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a hand bell on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. Imogen found a oilskin map half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Imogen found a hand bell half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Imogen won 85 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 3, autumn of year 14

Someone left a ledger on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the census for an hour and parted better friends than before. Someone left a sextant on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. At the Archivist's cell, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real grain scale from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 4, autumn of year 14

Imogen won 24 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Imogen moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 5, autumn of year 14

A dispute over the tariff on salt flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Imogen closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Imogen was hired to carry a bundle of letters from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 6, spring of year 14

Someone left a glass float on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the tariff on salt. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Imogen won 48 ink-weights on a bet about the quarantine and spent all of it on supper. Imogen spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 66 of everything, except the clockwork bird, which is always short.

Entry 7, autumn of year 14

Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. At the Archivist's cell, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. A dispute over the comet flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Imogen closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. At the Archivist's cell, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real spool of wire from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 8, summer of year 14

Imogen repaired the clockwork bird at the Stacks of Ash for Leocadia, who paid in 32 ink-weights and a long story about the singing at the docks. At the Stacks of Ash, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real sextant from a fake one by weight alone. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Stacks of Ash. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Imogen spent the day counting stock at the Stacks of Ash: 40 of everything, except the hand bell, which is always short.

Entry 9, autumn of year 15

Imogen repaired the glass float at the Stacks of Ash for Farida, who paid in 14 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Rumours about the singing at the docks reached the Stacks of Ash. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the tax on doors flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the Stacks of Ash; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Imogen was hired to carry a sack of salt from the Stacks of Ash to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the right way to mend a net for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 10, autumn of year 15

Imogen repaired the oilskin map at the sluice gates for Ysolde, who paid in 17 ink-weights and a long story about the comet. Benedikt came by asking about whether the bridge will hold. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Someone left a spool of wire on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 11, autumn of year 15

Imogen won 48 ink-weights on a bet about the singing at the docks and spent all of it on supper. The weather turned. Imogen moved the spool of wire indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the tax on doors. At the cataloguers' gallery, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real hand bell from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 12, autumn of year 15

Rosalind came by asking about the new curfew. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. Imogen repaired the coil of rope at the Stacks of Ash for Viggo, who paid in 51 ink-weights and a long story about the rumour of a second well. Imogen won 7 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 13, summer of year 16

Imogen found a cracked compass half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Imogen closed early, walked to the Stacks of Ash, and watched the lights come on. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the cataloguers' gallery. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a grain scale on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 14, spring of year 16

Imogen won 48 ink-weights on a bet about the comet and spent all of it on supper. Imogen found a cracked compass half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the rumour of a second well for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 15, autumn of year 16

Rumours about the quarantine reached the Reading Well. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 16, summer of year 16

Marisol came by asking about the tax on doors. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the quarantine for an hour and parted better friends than before. Imogen spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 22 of everything, except the copper pipe, which is always short. The weather turned. Imogen moved the sextant indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the census.

Entry 17, summer of year 16

Tallulah came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. At the Reading Well, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real clockwork bird from a fake one by weight alone. The weather turned. Imogen moved the hand bell indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the comet.

Entry 18, spring of year 16

Imogen won 7 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about the right way to mend a net reached the Reading Well. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Imogen repaired the sack of salt at the Reading Well for Soren, who paid in 30 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. Rumours about the old tunnels reached the Reading Well. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. The weather turned. Imogen moved the ledger indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net.

Entry 19, spring of year 16

At the Reading Well, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real ledger from a fake one by weight alone. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Imogen found a signal flag half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Imogen spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 79 of everything, except the grain scale, which is always short.

Entry 20, autumn of year 16

The weather turned. Imogen moved the wax seal indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the right way to mend a net. Imogen spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 31 of everything, except the cracked compass, which is always short. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 21, spring of year 17

At the cataloguers' gallery, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. Imogen won 23 ink-weights on a bet about the right way to mend a net and spent all of it on supper. Someone left a clockwork bird on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. Imogen was hired to carry a signal flag from the cataloguers' gallery to the Reading Well without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Someone left a cracked compass on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right.

Entry 22, summer of year 17

Imogen spent the day counting stock at the sluice gates: 43 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. Imogen closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the harvest count for an hour and parted better friends than before. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the tariff on salt for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 23, autumn of year 17

Imogen won 47 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper. Rumours about who really won the regatta reached the sluice gates. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Imogen closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 24, summer of year 17

Imogen repaired the clockwork bird at the Archivist's cell for Xavier, who paid in 74 ink-weights and a long story about the tax on doors. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the quarantine. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. The weather turned. Imogen moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the harvest count.

Entry 25, summer of year 17

Imogen spent the day counting stock at the cataloguers' gallery: 50 of everything, except the signal flag, which is always short. The weather turned. Imogen moved the bolt of linen indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. Baptiste came by asking about the singing at the docks. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. Imogen was hired to carry a pair of spectacles from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded. Imogen was hired to carry a spool of wire from the cataloguers' gallery to the Archivist's cell without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 26, autumn of year 17

Rumours about the tariff on salt reached the Stacks of Ash. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the comet. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Imogen was hired to carry a bolt of linen from the Stacks of Ash to the cataloguers' gallery without opening it, and mostly succeeded.

Entry 27, summer of year 17

Lucienne came by asking about the price of lamp oil. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. Imogen spent the day counting stock at the Archivist's cell: 55 of everything, except the sextant, which is always short. Imogen found a bundle of letters half-buried near the Archivist's cell and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not.

Entry 28, spring of year 17

Imogen repaired the glass float at the Reading Well for Dorothea, who paid in 12 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count. Imogen won 27 ink-weights on a bet about the new curfew and spent all of it on supper. Imogen won 16 ink-weights on a bet about the harvest count and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 29, autumn of year 17

An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the missing shipment for an hour and parted better friends than before. Imogen found a wax seal half-buried near the Stacks of Ash and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. The weather turned. Imogen moved the grain scale indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the price of lamp oil. Imogen won 61 ink-weights on a bet about the price of lamp oil and spent all of it on supper.

Entry 30, winter of year 17

A dispute over the comet flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Kestrel came by asking about the missing shipment. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead. A dispute over the comet flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the Archivist's cell; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Imogen closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on. At the Archivist's cell, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real cracked compass from a fake one by weight alone.

Entry 31, spring of year 17

At the cataloguers' gallery, Imogen taught a newcomer how to tell a real bolt of linen from a fake one by weight alone. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Imogen repaired the iron kettle at the cataloguers' gallery for Calloway, who paid in 52 ink-weights and a long story about the harvest count. Imogen found a oilskin map half-buried near the cataloguers' gallery and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 32, autumn of year 17

Imogen spent the day counting stock at the Reading Well: 24 of everything, except the spool of wire, which is always short. Imogen repaired the clockwork bird at the Reading Well for Liora, who paid in 77 ink-weights and a long story about the tariff on salt. Imogen found a cracked compass half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Imogen repaired the clockwork bird at the Reading Well for Katarina, who paid in 24 ink-weights and a long story about the quarantine. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about whether the bridge will hold for an hour and parted better friends than before.

Entry 33, winter of year 18

Imogen repaired the copper pipe at the sluice gates for Elowen, who paid in 29 ink-weights and a long story about the tax on doors. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the singing at the docks for an hour and parted better friends than before. Yusuf came by asking about the comet. Imogen said nothing useful and made tea instead.

Entry 34, autumn of year 18

A dispute over the comet flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the cataloguers' gallery; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Someone left a signal flag on the doorstep with no note. Imogen has a suspect and is probably right. A stranger asked Imogen for the password to the workshop. Imogen laughed and said it was written on the wall, which it is not. Imogen closed early, walked to the Reading Well, and watched the lights come on.

Entry 35, spring of year 18

Imogen found a sextant half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it. Imogen won 71 ink-weights on a bet about the tax on doors and spent all of it on supper. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the singing at the docks. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table. Rumours about the missing shipment reached the Reading Well. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. Imogen found a glass float half-buried near the Reading Well and spent the evening trying to work out who had lost it.

Entry 36, autumn of year 18

Rumours about the new curfew reached the Reading Well. Imogen pretended not to care and then asked everyone about it. A dispute over the price of lamp oil flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. Imogen closed early, walked to the Archivist's cell, and watched the lights come on. Imogen repaired the coil of rope at the Reading Well for Farida, who paid in 67 ink-weights and a long story about the old tunnels. the Order of Wet Pages sent a notice about the rumour of a second well. Imogen read it twice, folded it into a square and used it to level a table.

Entry 37, summer of year 18

A dispute over the census flared up between Imogen and a neighbour outside the Reading Well; it ended, as usual, with neither of them conceding. The weather turned. Imogen moved the iron kettle indoors and wrote three lines to an old friend about the missing shipment. An old teacher visited unannounced. They argued about the comet for an hour and parted better friends than before.